

The James Webb Space Telescope Captures the Dusty SN 2013ej

Szanna Zsíros^{1,2}, Ilse De Looze³, Tamás Szalai¹, Ori D. Fox⁴, Melissa Shahbandeh⁴,
Dust collaboration JWST2n

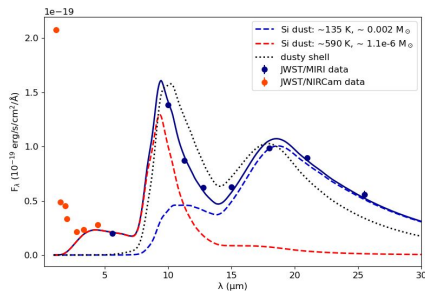

¹Dept. of Experimental Physics, Institute of Physics, University of Szeged, Hungary

²HUN-REN CSFK Konkoly Observatory, Konkoly Thege M. út 15-17, Budapest, 1121, Hungary

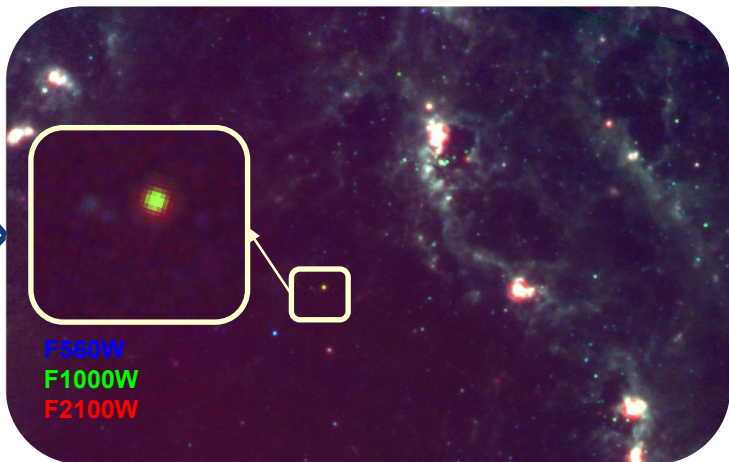

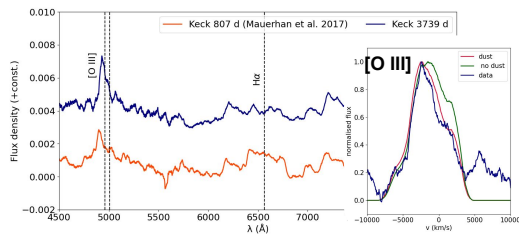

³Sterrenkundig Observatorium, Ghent University, Krijgslaan 281 – S9, 9000 Gent, Belgium

⁴Space Telescope Science Institute

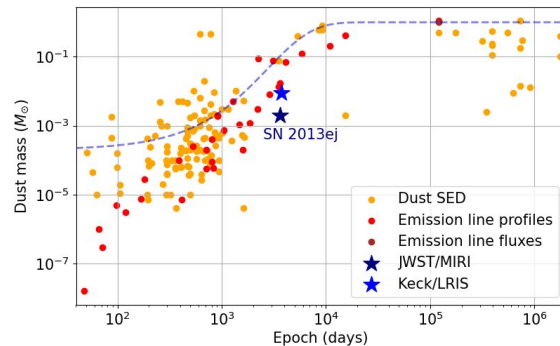

JWST/ MIRI & NIRCarn

Keck/LRIS

A significant amount of dust in the environment of the SN, even in these later phases!

Acknowledgment

SZs received support from the NKFIH OTKA K142534 grant. This work was supported by the University Research Fellowship Program of the Ministry of Culture and Innovation, funded by the National Research, Development, and Innovation Fund (EKÖP-24-4-SZTE-674).

Data adopted from Roger Wesson's homepage:
<https://nebulousresearch.org/dustmasses/>